Letter from the President

Welcome to the 38th Annual Meeting of the Western Literature Association! Ours is an exciting and provocative program, with something for everyone. We have some pretty different and new kinds of panels for WLA. Often I have organized established topics in what I hoped were novel ways, putting papers together that don't seem at first glance to match. Many of you have also organized panels that ask us to stretch. In all, it seems clear we are an organization growing in new directions, and doing so with the guiding help of lots of long-standing members. To them I am very grateful.

This year's main event is a public reading on Thursday night by the internationally renowned writer Sandra Cisneros. She's the WLA's Distinguished Achievement Award Recipient for 2003. This reading is free and open to the public, and sure to draw a large Houston crowd. Such an event is meaningful to me for the ways it links scholarly with non-scholarly publics, and permits WLA to reach out to audiences we less frequently address. Preceding Sandra Cisneros on Thursday night is Nuestra Palabra: Latino Writers Having Their Say, a multifaceted grassroots organization led by Artistic Director Tony Díaz that puts voice to much of what is new about the "new" west. We open our conference on Wednesday night with a double film screening of San Antonio filmmaker Jim Mendiola's films, and he will be on hand to answer questions. Our banquet speaker is the well known journalist and prose writer Rubén Martínez. Praise for Rubén Martínez's last book, Crossing Over: A Mexican Family on the Migrant Trail, has brought him well-deserved international recognition for his work as a stylist as well as political theorist.

WLA also will present a Distinguished Achievement Award to a trio of sibling/critics, Ramón Saldívar, José David Saldívar, and Sonía Saldívar-Hull. Originally from south Texas, these siblings are the "first family" of Chicano/a Studies. The work of all of them together has reshaped Americanist scholarship and feminist scholarship, contributing some of the keywords common to new transnational studies. Agreeing, for the first time, to appear on the same panel, each will discuss in a plenary session the role of place in their own work and life history, and the future of regional studies more broadly defined.

By the time Saturday arrives, WLA members will be yearning for non-mall environments, and I invite you to partake of our Galveston tour, where the first stop will be the beach and anyone can walk, swim or even surf (for surfing you must contact me directly). For those of you who wish a more self-directed afternoon, we suggest the MFA Houston (along with the Menil) which is a lovely and very well-resourced major museum, and no trip to Houston is complete without visits there - especially given the MFAH's holdings in western landscape painting.

Again, welcome to Houston, it's great you are here!

Acknowledgements

I'd like to appreciate many kinds of resources earmarked for this conference, beginning with the labors and caring attention of David Messmer and Lourdes Alberto, graduate students in Rice's English Department and co-organizers of WLA-Houston. Also thanks to graduate students Priscilla Ybarra, Elizabeth Fenton, Michon Benson, as well as administrative support from Marcia Carter and Jamie Cook, and colleagues including Scott Derrick and Kirsten Ostherr who chaired panels, and to my other colleagues who were willing if finally unscheduled! Colleen Lamos did WLA the generous service of offering an "outsider's" plenary comment on a field distant from her own. The handiwork and collegial networks of my husband Jose F. Aranda, Jr. is visible throughout, and WLA is very fortunate to have so able a figure in our intimate midst.

For major financial backing, I wish to acknowledge very gratefully Rice University, in particular the offices of the President and Provost and Vice-Provost, Rice's Center for Cultural Studies, Fondren Library, the Dean of the Humanities, as well as the English Department, the Department of Art History, the Program for the Study of Women and Gender, the History Department, and Hispanic Studies. In recognition of Rice University's exceptional commitments to this conference, WLA extends a sincere thanks.

Conveners: David Dunaway, University of New Mexico
 Sara Spurgeon, University of Arizona

The experience of researching and producing a revised edition of Writing the Southwest (2003, University of New Mexico Press) forced this roundtable's conveners to tackle issues of canonicity and commercial appeal. What does it mean to be a marginalized writer within a marginalized canon? Has Western/Southwestern literature now become so hip that it is trendy and not marginal at all?

This new, substantial (31 essay) collection suggests the increasing status of regional studies. The editor and several contributors invite a discussion of the current status of the field, and the range of critical approaches to it. Is "regional" still synonymous with "minor?"

39TH ANNUAL WESTERN LITERATURE ASSOCIATION CONFERENCE

Christopher Schaberg

NATURE AND CULTURE IN THE NORTH AMERICAN WEST

SEPTEMBER 29 – OCTOBER 2, 2004
BIG SKY, MONTANA

The Last Best Place? Or, A Tourist Runs Through It? This year's Western Literature Association Conference—set in Big Sky, Montana—provides a distinctive environment in which to engage the contested identities and imagined natures of the North American West. We invite participants to submit individual papers or panels addressing the themes below or the topic of western literature in general. We particularly encourage papers that

- ◎ Critique the iconography of the Old and New West in film, TV, and other interdisciplinary venues.
- ◎ Analyze hybridity as a necessary component of western identities—in places, populations, and cultures.
- ◎ Theorize western borders and boundaries—Canadian/U.S. relations, contact zones of race and class, queer frontiers, the making of Yellowstone, and indigenous responses to Lewis & Clark.
- ◎ Examine the work of Montana writers such as James Welch, Dorothy Johnson, D'Arcy McNickle, Ivan Doig, David Quammen, Thomas McGuane, Mary Clearman Blew, Annick Smith, Jim Harrison, Jamie Harrison, Greg Keeler, Debra Earling, William Kittredge, James Crumley, Diane Smith, Tim Cahill, Judy Blunt, and Rick Bass.

Proposals for individual papers and panels should include a brief abstract of each paper. Individual proposals for papers should be no more than one page in length. Graduate students who wish to compete for the J. Golden Taylor Prize must submit their full conference-length papers (limit 15 pages). All above submissions, including Manfred Prize submissions, are due by June 1, 2004.
